JUDGE OLDS'S SUCCESSOR.

Gov. Matthews Speaks of the Character of His Appointment-Resignation Handed In.

Judge Olds yesterday handed in his resignation to Governor Matthews, as announced that he would in the Journal of yesterday. It reads as follows:

Dear Sir—I appreciate fully the distinction paid me by the people of Indiana in electing me to the judicial position which I now hold, as well as other honors previously conferred. My official relations with the bar and the people of the State, as well as with my associates on the Suprame Bench, have been most pleasant and agreeable; yet my duty to myself and family seems to require that I should retire from the bench and avail myself of an opportunity offered to re-enter the practice of law. I do, therefore, hereby resign the office of Supreme Judge of the State of Indiana, to take effect on the 15th day of June, 1893. Very respectfully yours,

WALTER OLDS. Hon. Claude Matthews, Governor of Indiana:

The Governor has received applications from eight or nine, and there are some who aspire, but who have had the sense of propriety to withhold all effort at pressing their claims until the fact of resignation should have been confirmed by the act. Governor Matthews said yesterday that he would not make the appointment this week. He had a brief talk with Judge Olds, but merely of a social nature and for exchange of courtesies. The Governor asked the Judge to make his resignation read to take effect at the date named, June 15, or at the appointment of his successor, and it was agreeable to him that the date named was chosen. There are some indications that the appointee to be has not yet been known as a candidate. It is well known that the Governor did not enjoy the evidence of scramble that there was so soon after the unofficial announcement of the resignation which has now come. One of the prominent eligibles for the appointment is Judge Zollars, of Fort Wayne, who has not made the unseemly scramble that has marked the candidacy of other candidates. Judge Zollars was the candidate whose name was opposite that of the retiring judge at the election at which the latter was chosen for the high position. Other candidates are Messrs, Hench, Lowry and Ellison, of Allen county; Thomas McCarthy, of Whitley county; G. A. Henry, of Grant; J. R. France, of Jay; Judge Goodykoontz, of Madison; T. J. Study, of Wayne; D. R. Mc-Kee, of Fayette. The Governor is receiving a large number of personal calls. receiving a large number of personal calls and scores of letters from the friends of candidates, many of whom are adopting the common pothouse method of seeking the appointment. Governor Matthews was asked the other day what kind of a man he would consider for the place. He said:

"I will seek to appoint a first-class lawyer, of unexceptionable character for integrity and devotion to the law. I will, of course, appoint a Democrat, and having selected one who, I believe, knows the law, and is an honest man, I will trust to him always to decide questions of whatever nature according to the Constitution and the law. I will not ask of any one how he stands on this or that question, and I would think no man worthy of the appointment who would indicate in the least how he would treat any given question."

Ex-Bishop Flickinger, of the United Brethren Church, is in the city, and will deliver a lecture this evening, at 8 o'clock, in the First United Brethren Church. Subject, "Africa." Rev. Mr. Flickinger was for many years missionary to Africa, and he never fails to interest his congregations in his talks on that benighted people. The lecture is free.

WILD SCENES WERE ENACTED

John Miller, a North Indianapolis Negro, Holds the Whole Town at Bay.

His "Speak Easy" Was Burned and He Called for His Pistol and Started In to Clean Out the Crowd.

John Mackey Shot Through the Shoulder, but Not Fatally Hurt.

Miller Saved from the Fire of the Police by the Interposition of His Daughter -Safely Behind the Bars.

Another instance of the reckless and uncalled-for use of a deadly weapon occurred last night in North Indianapolis, when John Miller, colored, shot John Mackey, white, in the right shoulder. Fortunately, the wound made by the thirty-eight-caliber revolver was only a fiesh wound, and the victim is not considered in any special danger. Dr. Karstetter extracted the bullet, and said that his patient would require a few days of absolute quiet, and if no complications arose he would be able to be out in a few days. The ball entered a few inches from the nipple and ranged around in the diaphragm without piercing the lung. The wounded man was carried to the saloon of A. Hitzelberger, near by, where the surgical attention was given him. A great crowd surrounded the place, anxious to know the fate of the victim.

The incident took on some of the proportions of a riot, and if Mackey had been dangerously or fatally wounded there might have been a lynching. The first of the trouble developed when, after putting up his horse just after dark. Miller was informed that the shanty at "Coney Island" which he had occupied during last summer as a "speak easy" was on fire.

This "speak easy" was an abomination to the neighborhood last summer, and Miller had frequently heard threats that it would be blown to atoms or wiped off the face of the earth. Just how the fire started nobody seems to know, but it was evidently of incendiary origin, and, judging from the rapidity with which a crowd collected about the burning shanty, its destruction was not entirely unexpected.

He became very much excited and rushed into the house and told his daughter that he wanted his pistol. "White folks done burn up de nigga's property," said he, and away he started to the scene of the fire. It was a full quarter mile run, and, having been drinking somewhat, his excitement was extreme. The crowd collected about the burning shanty, seeing his state of mind, began to "jolly" him and in various ways to tease him, resulting in making him beside himself with anger. He began to swing his revolver, saying in a menacing

"Stand back, gentlemens, stand back." He had started back after the shanty was about consumed, when the crowd began to follow him and he backed away, still saying, "Stand back, gentlemens!" Suddenly the revolver went off, and Mackey fell wounded in the shoulder. Then the crowd scattered for a minute, and part gave Mackey attention. The rest followed Miller to his housegon Shoemaker street, and when the report was spread that he had killed Mackey, the crowd grew very large, probably including five or six hundred people. They surrounded the house, but Miller let them know that he was still armed and told them to stand back. The injunction was obeyed, but there were mutterings and threats of mobbing the negro. The police were hastily telephoned for and the patrol wagon, with driver Steinruck and patrolman Alberts, hastened out on a dead run, creating no little excitement by their fast driving. By the time they arrived the crowd was still holding the desperate negro under surveillance, but they knew where the danger line was. They did not attempt to go verynear. When the officers arrived they asked the leaders why they did not seenre the man, and were told that he was in the house and had two "guns" and a knife, The officers went to the house, but did not find him there. They kicked the door in to gain admittance. Finally, there was a cry, "Here he is under the wagon!" and the officers rushed out there only to find Miller had left his hiding place, and was again standing and brandishing his pistol, saying, as before, "Stand back there, gentlemens!" A daughter of the man said to the offices. "You don't intend to shoot my father?" and they answered that they would not unless he would not surrender. She then rushed out to him and threw her arms about his neck. Her interposition was timely, as the officers were about to fire. Thus prevented from shooting, Miller was quickly seized and disarmed. He attempted no further resistance. The occurrence was witnessed by a large crowd in the rising moonlight, but after the arrest nothing more was said about summary vengeance upon the prisoner. Just before the officers saized him he threw away the revolver, and they were not able to find it. The size of the calibre was made known by the bullet after it was extracted. Sergeants Kurtz and Mefford went out to the excited suburb as soon as they were notified, and made an effort to find the Miller was taken to the station house. and charged with assault and battery with intent to kill. He is a negro of pronounced African features, about fifty-five years of age and repulsive in aspect. He is densely ignorant, and talks with a strong plantation dialect. Nevertheless, he is said sometimes to act as a lay exhorter in religious meetings. He is married, and has eight children and several grandchildren, and all live in the house on Shoemaker street, which he owns. He has been living in this city, he says, for fifteen years. His occupation is that of a whitewasher and a doer of odd jobs. His connection with the "speak easy" lasted only during the summer, but was long enough to keep him in trouble. He was never arrested, however, and has not been a man from whom the public has experienced much disturbance.

Miller's version of the story agrees with that of the officers. He does not deny that the pistol was discharged, but says he did not know that any one was hit until he was arrested. He hid under the wagon because he was afraid of the crowd. He says he knows Mackey very well, and had been friendly with him. He said, also, that, on the day before, Mackey had "slapped his jaws for him," but he was unable or unwilling to tell what the trouble was about. The threats of the crowd to mob him had a very exciting effect, which did not seem to be one of tear, but rather of anger, that a neighbor and a property holder should have his house burned down, and then the whole town set against him to harm him. There was some-thing "rotten," he said, when such things could be. He denied having any intention to shoot anybody, but could give no explanation why he took a weapon with him when he started to the fire, except that he thought some one had tried to destroy his property. There is no doubt that the fire the perpetrators. The locality is an unof trouble to the police.

THINKS HE IS PERSECUTED.

Luther Mehring Arrested for Having a Dead Herse Hauled Away-Contract with Rauh.

Some of the many peculiar methods of the present city administration are coming to light day by day, and since the Sullivan people have been acting very shabbily towards their enemies, the Downingites, a great many m cre state and party secrets are cropping out. Yesterday Luther Mehring, an old citizen who has been in she fertilizing business in this city for many years, was arrested by humane officer.Orlopp on the charge of carrying a dead animal through the streets to his fertilizing establishment down on the river banks, and this morning the case will come before Police Judge Buskirk. Mr. Mehring is very indignant, and claims that there was not only an effort to shut him out on the city contract for disposing of carcasses, but that he is being persecuted. He insists that he was not given an opportunity to bid on the privilege of hauling dead animals, but that the city made a private contract with E. Rauh & Son, by which the city only receives $50 a year for giving Rauh & Son the exclusive privilege. Mr. Mehring says he was not only willing to give the city $1,000 a year for this right at the time the contract was made with the Rauhs, but he is now ready to pay $1,000 more, a year than Rauh & Son are paying if the city will advertise for bids and give the right to the man who bids the highest.

Mr. Mehring has put a great deal of money in his fertilizing establishment and he feels that it almost amounts to a con-spiracy to shut him out of business. He will fight the case in the courts and, if possible, find out why the contract was let to Ranh & Son without giving anybody else an opportunity to bid. It is believed an attempt will be made to prosecute Mr. Mehring under an old city ordinance prohibiting contractors who haul dead animais from passing through the streets in the daytime with the carcasees. The ordinance compels them to drive through the alleys when hanling in the daytime. This ordinance is almost a dead letter and has been violated time and time again, it is stated. Very few people know that such an ordinance exists. Mr. Mehring has employed Duncan & Smith to represent him.

ALDINE HOTEL PATRONS.

There Is Hope of Getting Something Out of It-The Committee's Attorney at Work.

From statements in the Chicago papers it appears that the organizer and manager of the Aldine Hotel Company was one Thomas Cadwallader, who is quite well and not unfavorably known in that city. It is not believed there that any swindle was intended, but simply that the company was unable to carry out its promises. There seems to be a prospect that investors in the enterprise may get something out of it. The hotel is being completed by S. O. Lanphere, who says:

I contracted with the Aldine Hotel Company to sell it the land on which the hotel stands, after receiving the most flattering indorsements of Cadwallader. He failed to carry out his contracts even after I had advanced several thou-sand dollars to keep the building free from liens, and to pay for material and labor. To save myself I was obliged to take the building and complete it. I will lose more than anyone else. These contracts for board are an obligation against the hotel company, which is hopelessly bankrupt. Nevertheless, at the urgent solicitation of the company, I have agreed to accept them at half their face value.

Patrons of the Aldine Hotel received circulars yesterday from a Chicago lawyer offering to advance his services in behalf of the patrons if each one would send him 10 per cent. of the amount of the claim. The local committee already has an attorney employed in Chicago looking after the claims of the Indianapolis people and they advise that the patrons wait until this attorney employed by them has made an investigation.

He also developed a penchant for walking and has walked nearly all over the country.

Mr. George Merritt, of this city, is the owner of a fine ranch in San Diego county, California, a portion of which he is devoting to the cultivation of lemons. A day or two ago he received a consignment of the fruit grown on his trees, and has been exhibiting them to his friends with much pride. Many of the lemons are ten inches in circumference, the rinds being almost as thin as paper, and the quality exceptionally fine.

Ex-Priest Rudolph's Second Lecture. Ex-Priest Rudolph delivered another lecture last night in this city. About eight hundred men gathered at Plymouth Church to hear him talk on the confessional of the Roman Catholic Church. He spoke verg bitterly of an editorial in a morning paper which reflected on him, and he took occa-sion to say that the inkstand of that editorial department was charged with popery. He thought the paper was taking a stand against free speech. The church was decorated with American flags, and the big letters of the A. P. A. loomed up on the rear walls. Mr. Rudolph will lecture again to-night at Plymouth.

Death of Mrs. William L. Deacon. Mrs. William H. Deacon, who had been suffering for two years with consumption. died last evening at her home on North New Jersey street. Though long an invalid, her death was unexpected and came as a cruel shock to her family. Mrs. Deacon was aged twenty-six years, and was the daughter of A. C. Schumacher, of Delbrooke, O. WHO IS TARPY'S MURDERER?

Bandit Who Committed the Daring Crime in Haughville Still at Large.

Little or No Clew to His Identity Fet Obtained -Murdered Man Taken Home to His Family-Feeling Against Saloons.

As detailed in the city edition of the Journal yesterday, John Tarpey, an employe of the Malleable iron works, exstreet commissioner, and a respectable citizen of Haughville, was shot to death early yesterday morning, just as he made an unfortunate entrance into the door of Shaw's saloon, Tarpey had been attending a meeting of the Haughville town board and was on his way home, between 12 and 1 o'clock, in company with Trustee Edward Moore, Town Treasurer Charles Eigleburg and Tom Shaw, brother of the proprietor of the saloon. As the party passed the place it was anggested that they go in and get a lunch and discuss the affairs of the evening. As they entered the side door, they noticed Terry Hughes, the bartender, dozing in a chair, and a masked man in the act of extracting the money drawer from the bar.

Eigleberg was the first to enter, and without suspecting that there was a burglary going on, inquired of the masked man what he was up to. The latter replied, "Nothing." and came from behind the bar with the cash box in his hands. As he attempted to pass out he met Tarpey, and from one of the revolvers which he clutched he fired. The pistol was almost against the breast of Tarpey and he received the ball. Throwing off his coat and vest, he exclaimed that he was shot and fell to the floor, expiring almost instantly. The murderer passed on and met Shaw on the threshold of the door. The latter felt the muzzle of a revolver against his face, but shoved the weapon aside, and the maske man rushed out into the street and fied in

A moment before the victim of the mur-derous shot breathed his last he expressed a desire to see the priest, but was dead before the arrival of the one who was sum-

Coroner Beck arrived on the scene about 4 o'clock and after viewing the body it was taken home. With the assistance of Dr. Brennen the coroner located the ball, which had entered at the left side at the border of the second rib, passing backward and downward through the aorta. The bullet then entered the right auricle and lodged in the pericardium sack.

The murdered man resided at 146 Belmont avenue, and there his body was taken at the gray of dawn to his stricken wife and children. The scene at the little home was intensely pitiful, and caused the most poignant grief in a family which, a few hours before, had been apparently peace-ful and happy. John Tarpey was about fifty years old, and the father of seven children, four of whom, with the wife and mother, survive him. He was a native of Ireland, but for the past twenty-five years he had lived in the vicinity of this city. He was a devout and prominent member of the Catholic Church, besides being a citizen of worth to his town. The news of the murder spread rapidly through the little village, and when Police Captain Dawson and Sergeant Hyland entered the town at 3 o'clock the excitement was intense. The man Wagner, who was detained for a time on suspicion, later gave his name as Jackson. He was found in an apparent sound sleep in a room over Gaetz's saloon. He knew nothing except that he had come to town that evening with a molder from Cincinnati, who claimed to be seeking a situation. Yesterday morning the money drawer carried away by the unknown burglar was found in the rear of the schoolhouse yard. It had contained $15 and a few cents.

The distressing affair has caused much comment upon the loose laws regarding saloons which appear to be in vogue about Haughville, and the citizens are inclined toward an uprising, many of them accus-ing the town officials of upholding the proprietors of groggeries.

Yesterday morning it was learned that Matlock's grocery, located near the scene or the murder, had been entered by burglars, but the money drawer had been drawn from its place and a small amount of cash scattered about the floor. Nothing had been taken away. The party out searching for the murderer when the Journal went to press yesterday morning kept up its work until long after daylight, and every nook and cranny about Haughville where it would be possible for a man to conceal himself was searched without result, until they finally settled down to the belief that the desperado had made good his escape to this city where he doubtless believes himself safe.

During the afternoon Wagner was taken before Justice Martin. The charge of vagrancy was placed against him, as a means by which he could be held, awaiting inves-His peculiar hallucination is that his wife | William Jackman, and that he lived in He said that his right name wa Haughville several years ago. Held as a Witness. Patrick McGowen, a molder employed at Hetherington & Berner's foundry on West South street, was arrested by detectives Dougherty and Kaehn at the Germania House, on South Meridian street, yesterday afternoon and held for drunkeness. While McGowen was undoubtedly intoxicated at the time he was arrested, that was not the cause prompting his arrest, and he is held in hope that he may be able to throw some light on the identity of the man who killed Tarpey. The police received word that there was a man at the Germania House who could possibly tell them something about the identity of the man. The two detectives named went to the house and McGowen told them that Wednesday afternoon two men whom he did not know, claiming to be molders from Cincinnati came to the house and he paid for their supper and lodging. After supper they went away and had not returned. Mo Gowen said he knew nothing of the men. He was under the influence of liquor and it was decided to arrest him and see if he would know more when he sobered up.

Dr. Metcalf's Visit to Madison County-How the Disease Was Brought In.

Dr. Metcalf, secretary of the State Board of Health, has been making some investigations as to the source of the smallpox at Alexandria and has found that it was probably transmitted to the first family by employes of the numerous factories who are continually going and coming in the gas towns. There are, he has found, one hundred cases of the disease in towns in Pennsylvania and Ohio where there are glass factories. Dr. Metcalf has therefore directed the health officers of Muncie, Marion, Kokomo, Anderson and Elwood to be on their guard and to quarantine and to vaccinate those who come in from the infected districts. It is reported that the infant child in the first family to be attacked will likely not recover, but otherwise the patients are in no danger. Dr. Metcalf was in Madison county, yesterday, to expedite measures for the prevention of the further spread of the disease.

Board of Trade Ticket. The nominating committee of the Board of Trade will meet this morning to select the regular ticket, which is to be submitted to the suffrages of the members at the approaching annual election. There will probably be an independent ticket, and perhaps another, as there was last year. With every year the honors and influence of the office increase until there are some who would rather be president of the board than Mayor of the city. The committee on communications and resolutions will meet this afternoon to consider the business on hand to be submitted to the meeting of the governing board next Monday night.
